

Agricultural Department.

Buck Wheat.

Many farmers, from not being acquainted with the management of this grain, often permit it to remain too long in the field. In some cases it is not cut till so much of it is ripened that the process of mowing and getting in is necessarily attended with heavy loss. As a general rule, it should be cut when two-thirds of the grain is fully ripe; and, when practicable, before the advent of severe frosts. By following this rule, we not only economize a large amount of the heaviest and best developed grain, which the action of severe frost would "shatter," but we also save, in addition, a very considerable proportion of that which is immatured, and which, if exposed to the direct and powerful action of this principle, would be a total loss. When cut at the period above specified, the succulent and juicy state of the awn will cause the unripened grain to fill almost as rapidly after being cut, as, under the most favorable and auspicious circumstances, it could possibly have done before that operation.

This assertion we are aware will appear paradoxical to many, yet it is nevertheless strictly true. As the grain stands in the field, a heavy frost necessarily affects every part and fibre; but when cut and raked into heaps or small bundles, only the outer surface is exposed; consequently a very large proportion of the entire mass remains unimpaired, and will finally ripen and become good and perfect grain. And this result is experienced even where there is exposure to many and severe frosts for many successive nights.

Should the haul be extraordinarily heavy and succulent, it may be proper frequently to turn the heaps. This operation should be performed with a careful hand, as rough usage will inevitably be attended with considerable loss. After remaining several days in this condition, it should be pitched into a cart, and taken to the barn to be thrashed; or, should the farmer prefer it, this operation may be performed in the field.—Maine Farmer.

Preservation of Apples.

The Agriculturalist recommends that "Apples intended to be preserved for winter and spring use, should remain upon the trees until quite ripe, which usually takes place at the coming of the first heavy frosts. They should then be plucked from the trees by hand, in a fair day, and packed up immediately in casks, in alternate layers of dry sand, plaster, chaff, saw-dust, or bran, and conveyed to a cool, dry place, as soon as possible. The sand or saw-dust may be dried in the heat of summer, or may be baked in an oven at the time required to be used. The peculiar advantages arising from packing apples in sand, are explained and commented upon as follows, by Mr. Webster, author of the "American Dictionary of the English Language." "Let the sand keep the apples from the air, which is essential to their preservation; 2d. The sand checks the evaporation or perspiration of apples, thus preserving in them their full flavor—at the same time moisture yielded by the apples is absorbed by the sand—so that the apples are kept dry, and all mustiness is prevented. My pippins, in May and June, are as fresh as when first picked. Even the ends of the stems look as if just separated from the twigs; 3d. The sand is equally a preservative from frost, rats, &c. But after the extreme heat of June takes place, all apples speedily lose their flavor, and become insipid."—New York Farmer.

DIP YOUR SHINGLES IN OIL.—Mr. B. Nason, of this town, showed us the other day a few pine shingles which he took off the edge of the roof of his house while making some alterations. These shingles had been on the house over twenty-seven years, and are now as sound as when first put on. What is the cause of this wonderful preservation, in this instance, while in other cases shingles have often rotted so much in five or eight years as to make it necessary to re-shingle the roof? The cause is this: When these shingles were put on, they were simply dipped in hot oil. It will be well for builders to note this fact.—Maine Cultivator.

NEW FLAYERS.—An artisan of Baltimore has invented a material for flaying which resembles, when completed, highly polished granite.
